

A BRIEF HISTORY OF BAR 190

A fitting place to begin the story of Bar 190 is in the 1950s, when ownership of The Gore passed to Robin Howard and Peter Herbert. Howard, a wine-loving aristocrat with an extraordinary wartime past, and Herbert, a third-generation hotelier trained in Austria, joined forces to transform the hotel into what was described as “an unrivalled temple of gastronomy,” complete with the longest wine list in London. Their shared passion for gourmet food, fine wine and exceptional hospitality earned The Gore the nickname “The Connaught in the West.”

By the 1990s, The Gore was in new hands. Peter McKay and Douglas Blain, famed for their passion for historic buildings, acquired the hotel. At the time, the bar and restaurant were operating independently, but the pair saw an opportunity to bring them back under the hotel’s wing and reimagine their potential. One of the spaces became a forerunner as a no-reservations restaurant, run by a young Antony Worrall Thompson, and was already drawing a loyal following despite its unconventional setup; while the fresh energy and creative spirit laid the foundation for what is now Bar 190, a lively venue that continued its history as one of London’s most iconic gathering spots.

Bar 190’s legendary status was cemented in 1968, when The Rolling Stones chose it as the setting to launch their new Beggars Banquet album, hosting an opulent Tudor-style feast ending in the infamous custard pie fight. Bar 190 has since echoed with stories of rock ‘n’ roll debauchery and artistic brilliance. From the leading ladies of Dame Judy Garland and Dame Edith Evans, to appearances by Eric Clapton, Noel Gallagher, Donovan, and Zucchero, Bar 190 has long been a magnet for musicians and cultural icons.

If you think you saw them, you probably did!
